Plot Summary

"The Adventure of the Speckled Band" begins with a dramatic scene in which Helen Stoner seeks the assistance of Sherlock Holmes. She is anxious and distraught, revealing that her sister Julia died under mysterious circumstances two years earlier. Julia's last words were about a "speckled band," which has haunted Helen since that tragic day. Helen fears for her own life, as she is now forced to live in the same house where her sister died, and strange noises and occurrences have made her increasingly paranoid.

Holmes, intrigued by the case, agrees to help Helen. The detective and Watson visit Stoke Moran, the Stoner family estate, where they uncover a series of chilling clues that lead them to suspect Helen's stepfather, Dr. Grimesby Roylott. Dr. Roylott is a menacing figure with a violent past and a vested interest in the Stoner family fortune.

As Holmes and Watson investigate, they discover a variety of peculiarities in the house, including:

- A bell pull that does not function
- A ventilator connecting Helen's room to Dr. Roylott's
- A mysterious saucer of milk

The tension builds as Holmes employs his keen powers of observation and deduction to piece together the puzzle. In a thrilling climax, Holmes and Watson spend the night in Helen's room, prepared to confront whatever threat may arise.
