Setup and Preparation

Proper setup is critical for a seamless Sunday Dandelion Doom experience. This section explains how to organize the game area, distribute components, and prepare players for the initial turn. Following these instructions ensures fairness and clarity before gameplay begins.

Setting Up the Board

Begin by unfolding the game board on a flat surface accessible to all players. Ensure all territories and markers are visible and correctly placed. Shuffle the resource cards thoroughly, then position them face down in the designated deck area.

Distributing Player Materials

Each player selects a color and receives the corresponding tokens and a starting hand of resource cards. Tokens should be placed in the player's designated starting area on the board. Players also receive a set number of initial resources, as specified in the instruction manual.

Determining Turn Order

Turn order can be established by rolling dice or another agreed-upon method. The player with the highest roll typically begins, followed by others in clockwise order. Maintaining consistent turn order throughout the game is essential for fairness.

Basic Gameplay Rules

This section covers the core mechanics of Sunday Dandelion Doom, including movement, resource management, combat resolution, and scoring. Familiarity with these rules is necessary to participate effectively in the game.

Player Turns

Each turn consists of several phases: resource collection, movement, combat, and scoring. Players start by drawing resource cards, then move tokens according to dice rolls or card effects. Combat occurs when opposing tokens occupy the same territory, resolved by dice rolls and modifiers from resource cards.

Resource Management

Resources are vital for deploying units and activating special abilities. Players must strategically decide when to spend or conserve resources to maximize their control over territories. Efficient resource management often determines the game's outcome.

Combat and Conflict Resolution

When two players' tokens engage in the same territory, combat is initiated. Dice rolls determine the outcome, taking into account modifiers from resource cards and unit strength. The losing player must retreat or lose tokens, altering the territorial control on the board.
