Anxiety disorders are the most common mental health issues affecting millions of people worldwide. They encompass a range of conditions, including generalized anxiety disorder (GAD), panic disorder, social anxiety disorder, and specific phobias. Understanding the nature of these disorders is crucial for effective treatment.

What is Anxiety?

Anxiety is a natural response to stress, characterized by feelings of worry, fear, and apprehension. While it's normal to experience anxiety in certain situations, such as public speaking or taking an exam, individuals with anxiety disorders may experience excessive and persistent anxiety that interferes with their daily lives.

What are Phobias?

Phobias are intense, irrational fears of specific objects, situations, or activities. Common phobias include fear of heights (acrophobia), spiders (arachnophobia), and flying (aviophobia).
