Historical Background and Creation

The constitution of the united states was drafted in response to the inadequacies of the Articles of Confederation, which had governed the newly independent states since the Revolutionary War. Under the Articles, the federal government was too weak to effectively manage national issues such as defense, taxation, and interstate commerce. In 1787, delegates from twelve states convened in Philadelphia to draft a new constitution that would create a stronger federal government while protecting individual liberties and state sovereignty.

The Constitutional Convention

The Constitutional Convention began in May 1787 with 55 delegates representing diverse interests and political philosophies. Key figures included George Washington, who presided over the convention, James Madison, often called the "Father of the Constitution," and Benjamin Franklin. The delegates debated numerous issues, such as the representation of states in Congress, the powers of the executive branch, and how to balance federal and state authority.

Compromises and Agreements

Several critical compromises shaped the final document. The Great Compromise established a bicameral legislature with proportional representation in the House of Representatives and equal representation in the Senate. The Three-Fifths Compromise addressed how enslaved individuals would be counted for representation and taxation purposes. These agreements helped bridge divides between large and small states and between Northern and Southern interests.
