Indigenous Peoples and Early Inhabitants

Long before European contact, Virginia was home to numerous Indigenous tribes, including the Powhatan Confederacy, which was a powerful alliance of over thirty tribes in the Tidewater region. These tribes lived off the land, engaging in agriculture, hunting, and fishing.

Culture and Society

- The Powhatan people cultivated crops such as corn, beans, and squash, known as the "Three Sisters," which were vital to their diet.
- Social structures were organized around kinship and clans, with a strong emphasis on communal living and shared resources.
- Spiritual beliefs were deeply intertwined with nature, and many tribes practiced animism, believing in spirits residing in the natural world.

European Exploration

The late 15th and early 16th centuries saw an influx of European explorers, driven by a desire for new trade routes and resources. Notable figures include:

- John Cabot (1497): An Italian explorer who sailed under the English flag, Cabot is thought to have landed on the North American coast, possibly near Virginia.
