Background of the Gulf of Tonkin Incident

The Gulf of Tonkin incident refers to two separate confrontations involving U.S. Navy ships and North Vietnamese forces in August 1964. The events that transpired in this critical waterway were instrumental in shaping U.S. policy in Vietnam.

Key Events Leading to the Resolution

1. First Incident (August 2, 1964): The USS Maddox, conducting a signals intelligence patrol, engaged in a skirmish with three North Vietnamese torpedo boats. The Maddox reported being fired upon, though subsequent investigations suggested that the North Vietnamese may not have intended to escalate the conflict.
2. Second Incident (August 4, 1964): Reports emerged that the Maddox and another destroyer, the USS Turner Joy, were attacked again. However, evidence later revealed that this second attack was likely a miscommunication or false alarm, fueled by radar malfunctions and crew confusion.

The Gulf of Tonkin Resolution: Key Provisions

In response to the incidents, President Lyndon B. Johnson sought congressional approval for military action. On August 7, 1964, Congress passed the Gulf of Tonkin Resolution, which authorized the president to use military force in Vietnam without an official declaration of war.
