Early Precursors and the Formation of al-Qaeda

(1979–1995)

The terror timeline year by year day by day minute by minute a comprehensive chronicle of the road to 911 and americas response begins with the geopolitical shifts in the late 20th century that laid the groundwork for modern terrorism. The Soviet invasion of Afghanistan in 1979 sparked a militant response, leading to the rise of mujahideen fighters supported by the United States and other allies. Among these fighters was Osama bin Laden, whose radical ideology crystallized during this period. By 1988, bin Laden founded al-Qaeda, marking the formal beginning of a global terrorist network.

Throughout the late 1980s and early 1990s, al-Qaeda expanded its reach, targeting U.S. interests and allies. The 1993 World Trade Center bombing was an early indication of the group's intent to execute large-scale attacks on American soil. Intelligence agencies began to recognize the growing threat, but coordination challenges and underestimations hindered effective prevention.
