These homophones, though pronounced identically, have different meanings and grammatical functions that can confuse learners of all ages. "Too" is an adverb meaning "also" or "excessively," "to" is a versatile preposition often used to indicate direction or purpose, and "two" is the numeral representing the number 2. Understanding these differences is the first step toward using them correctly in writing and speech.

Definition and Usage of "Too"

The word "too" serves as an adverb with two primary uses. First, it means "also" or "in addition," as in the sentence, "She wants to come too."
