Understanding Twins

Before diving into trivia questions, it's essential to understand the different types of twins and the basic biology behind twinning.

Types of Twins

1. Identical Twins (Monozygotic):

- Formed from a single fertilized egg that splits into two embryos.
- They share the same genetic material, making them genetically identical.

2. Fraternal Twins (Dizygotic):

- Result from two separate eggs being fertilized by two separate sperm cells.
- They share about 50% of their genetic material, similar to regular siblings.

3. Semi-Identical Twins (Sesquizygotic):

- A rare form where two sperm fertilize a single egg, which then splits.
- They share more genetic material than fraternal twins but less than identical twins.

Biological Factors Influencing Twinning

- Genetics: Family history of twins can increase the likelihood of having fraternal twins.
- Age: Women over 30 are more likely to release multiple eggs during ovulation.
- Nutrition: Some studies suggest that women with higher body mass index (BMI) may be more likely to conceive twins.
