Character clowns are often inspired by specific archetypes or social roles, such as the "tramp" or "farmhand." These clowns tend to adopt costumes and mannerisms that reflect their character's background. Well-known examples include the character of "Bozo the Clown" and the beloved "Ronald McDonald."

2.4 The Pierrot

Originating from the Commedia dell'arte, the Pierrot is a melancholic, sad clown often dressed in white with a ruffled collar. This type of clown represents the tragicomic elements of life and often expresses deep emotions through pantomime and exaggerated facial expressions.
