Historical Context of American Textbooks

The development of history textbooks in America is intertwined with the evolution of education. The works of authors like Noah Webster, who published "The First Part of the Elementary Spelling Book" in 1786, played a crucial role in unifying American English and fostering a national identity.
- Civil War and Reconstruction: The Civil War era prompted a reevaluation of American history. Textbooks began to grapple with themes of slavery, freedom, and civil rights, though many still portrayed the Confederacy in a sympathetic light.
