Definition and Explanation of Gaslighting

Gaslighting is a manipulative tactic used to make someone question their own reality, memory, or perceptions. In a relationship context, it often involves one partner undermining the other's confidence by denying facts, twisting narratives, or outright lying. The term "gaslighting" originates from the 1938 play "Gas Light," where a husband manipulates his wife into believing she is losing her mind by dimming the gas lights and denying the change. This concept has since evolved to describe similar psychological abuse patterns in relationships.

Understanding what gaslighting in a relationship means involves recognizing the power imbalance it creates. The gaslighter aims to control the victim's thoughts and feelings, often to avoid accountability or maintain dominance. This form of abuse is subtle but pervasive, making it difficult for victims to identify and confront.

Common Tactics Used in Gaslighting

Gaslighting employs various manipulative techniques designed to distort the victim's sense of reality. These tactics can occur gradually, making it challenging for the victim to recognize the abuse early on. Below are some of the most common strategies used by gaslighters.

- Denial of Facts: The abuser insists that events or conversations never happened, even when there is clear evidence.
- Trivializing Feelings: The gaslighter dismisses or belittles the victim's emotions, suggesting they are overreacting or being too sensitive.
- Blaming the Victim: The manipulator shifts responsibility onto the victim, accusing them of causing problems
