The Identity of the Tiger: Richard Parker

The tiger in Life of Pi is named Richard Parker, a Bengal tiger who becomes the central animal companion to the protagonist, Pi Patel, during his harrowing journey across the Pacific Ocean. Richard Parker is introduced early in the story as one of the animals aboard the cargo ship that sinks, leaving Pi stranded on a lifeboat with the tiger and a few other animals. The name Richard Parker itself has an intriguing backstory, as it was mistakenly swapped with the hunter's name on the ship's manifest, adding an element of irony and curiosity to the character.

Richard Parker is described as a majestic and powerful Bengal tiger, which is one of the largest tiger subspecies native to the Indian subcontinent. His physical characteristics—strength, agility, and imposing presence—make him both a threat and a protector throughout the novel. As a literal character, Richard Parker is a real tiger, which Pi must learn to coexist with in order to survive the vast and dangerous ocean.

Origin of the Name Richard Parker

The name Richard Parker has historical significance and is an interesting anecdote within the narrative. In reality, the name Richard Parker has been associated with maritime shipwreck stories involving cannibalism and survival, which parallels the novel's themes.

Physical Description and Characteristics

Richard Parker is portrayed as a large, orange-and-black Bengal tiger, exhibiting traits typical of the species such as territorial behavior and hunting instincts.
